Synopsis:

Sometimes you find that your destiny is bigger than you. No matter how hard you try to fight it.

Kian Cardan is the last half-elf swordsman alive. After training for decades in the Blue Dagger Mountains under his Elven mentor Gildor, his training to become a Sunblade Knight is completed. Now a master of the ancient techniques of the Elven warriors, the time has come for him to defend the weak, and combat ever-present forces of evil.

Kian walks out of the mountainous sanctuary where he spent the past forty years, with a strong desire to return home. But a cruel welcome awaits him, and he soon falls into the company of K'xarr and Cromwell, two mercenaries who appear to be harboring a dangerous secret.

But just beyond the veil, after centuries of hiding from the eyes of mortals. The old immortal God's that once ruled the lands of Saree are now hell-bent on reclaiming their world. They have set their sights set on Kian and his new companions. The half-breed swordsman and those of the bloodline are now pawns in these immortal beings bid for power.

Hard times have befallen the kingdom of Bandara, and when the king dies the crown is passed to the princess Raygan, instead of her older, more ambitious brother. With war drums beating in neighboring Abberdon, and sinister schemes festering within the castle walls, the Princess Raygan turns to the three unlikely allies for salvation.

Will Kian and his companions overcome the threat of these dark gods, as they poison their minds? Or will the evil deities soon come to regret their decision? Only time shall tell!
