Synopsis:

Remember that a person's name is to that person the sweetest and most important sound in any language.

"We should be aware of the magic contained in a name and realise that this single item is wholly and completely owned by the person with whom we are dealing... and nobody else. The name sets the individual apart; it makes him or her unique among all others. The information we are imparting or the request we are making takes on a special importance when we approach the situation with the name of the individual. From the waitress to the senior executive, the name will work magic as we deal with others."

Born on November 24, 1888 in Maryville, Missouri, Dale Carnegie was a farmer's son who completed his education from the State Teachers College in Warrensburg. As a sales representative, Carnegie worked for Armour & Company for a considerable time, until he quit sales in 1911 to pursue his dream of becoming a lecturer. He also attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York but did not earn much success as an actor. As an author, some of his published works include Abraham Lincoln's biography, titled, Lincoln the Unknown, self-help books like How to Stop Worrying and Start Living and Little Known Facts About Well Known People to name a few. He has also co-authored several books on the art of public speaking.

How to Win Friends and Influence People was declared a bestseller in 1936 and it went in its 17th printing within a few months. The book had sold five million copies in 31 languages by the time of his death. Talking Points
